The content consumption pattern has changed drastically over the period of years.

The new media platforms along with the traditional medias are fighting for the consumer’s time and attention.

Whereas, the consumer are actively seeking ways to avoid ads and enjoy content.

The way forward is to cover all the consumer touch points. Be where they are, when they are present. At the same time interact with them and fulfill their needs.
Advertiser expectations

- To drive reach
- For media to act as a partner & provide creative solutions

To engage with customers

Disruptions

- Fragmentation of audiences
- Traditional media is no longer the sole channel for audience aggregation
- One medium/channel alone may not be enough to achieve objectives

Solution - integration
The need for integration

1. Increase reach - by adding another medium

2. Add frequency - by using a less expensive medium

3. Reinforce the message - Using different kinds of sensory stimuli

4. Deliver the message to the consumer through his/her day

5. Build interactivity, relationship - dialogue not just monologue
By the Theory of Media Multiplier effect, a consumer when exposed to multiple mediums get more awareness on a brand as compared to a single medium.
Why Events?

Marketers need opportunities to build relationship, generate goodwill and get the trust of prospective consumers.

- Unique opportunity to interact with the brand. Get first hand experience.
- Consumers seeking more than a pitch while making a purchase decision.
We also need to re-look at our selling strategies

Content selling → Consultative selling → Collaborative selling
Consultative selling

Understand the deeper needs and buying motives of the advertiser and act as a trusted advisor by offering solutions within their relationship
Collaborative selling

Partnership between advertiser and media. Both organizations realize that their longer term success is predicated on both of them staying in business - and this means that supplier needs matter too. E.g. Co-branded campaigns: Malayala Manorama weekly Pampers – Kunjikaruthal
